

The arm's-length principle (ALP)

The ALP states that intra-group transactions should be priced by comparing them with similar ones carried out on a commercial basis at market prices, as if both parties were independent – at arm's length from one another. This principle is generally contained in article 9 of double tax treaties and in the domestic laws of countries around the world.